Five More Recruits From Oyen District

Major Robinson of 89th. Battalion Was in Town

Major C. W. Robinson of the 89th. Battalion, was in Oyen last Friday, when recruits for his regiment were physically examined and sworn in.

Contrary to expectations, the number of recruits secured from this district was very small. It was thought that about twenty-five men would be obtained here. At the end of the day however only five had signed on. Several men have expressed themselves as being willing to enlist, but could not leave till early in January. These men will go with the 89th. If they can secure a place; failing this they will enlist in another Battalion.

Interviewed by the News, Major Robinson, said that recruiting for the 89th. was going along famously. He thought that the regiment would soon be brought up to full strength.

The Oyen Council For 1916

No Nominations Made

The meeting for the purpose of nominating men for office in the Village Council for 1916, was a dismal failure. The notice posted round the village, advising the ratepayers that this meeting could be held on Monday evening, December 6th failed to rouse interest; and at ten o'clock, with only two ratepayers present, the Secretary declared the meeting closed.

John Bull's Way

Nervousness, among those who sympathize with the Allies over any cabinet shindy in England would probably be quite without warrant. That's the way John Bull usually does it. In the life-and-death struggle with Napoleon he turned out a half a dozen cabinets. He had no sooner got the Crimean War neatly upon his astonished hands than he indulged in a parliamentary spasm and fired the ministry.

When foreign relations are as bad as they can be and brickbats are coming through all the windows like hail, John's first idea is to grasp the government firmly by its whiskers, hook a chair over its head and kick it under the table—after which he feels fit to attend to the little matter outside.

We have heard a good deal lately about British despatches, and maybe it all so. But to judge simply by the past we should say that when England is all summer and wail, with everybody shaking his fist in everybody else's face, there's a howl from one of his broken heads and a whack there the stove lid catches papa in the eye-socket, then everything is most promising and the outlook could not be better.

Judging by the past, if England fought as slowly as France does we should suspect it was out of wind and could not last long—S.E.P.

Germans in Canada

In a letter from one of our subscribers in the United States the writer tells us, "I often hear it said that the government of Canada has all the Germans in Canada imprisoned, and the prisoners are made to work on the roads." Our correspondent goes on to say, "What he does not believe that the government has molested a single German who was attending to his business," and asks us to make a statement concerning them in the column of this paper.

Our correspondent is right in believing that the government of Canada has not interfered with any German in Canada, whose behaviour entitled him to recognition as a good citizen. And just as we see any German in Canada remains a good citizen, he will be treated with every respect and consideration. It is true that a number of Germans in Canada have been interned, but our correspondent may rest assured that these internments were not made without a good reason in every case. We cannot say whether the men in internment camps are turned out on road work.

There are many strange reports in circulation in the States as to how Germans in Canada are treated. Whether these reports are started by a malicious spirit or are merely opinions that have become distorted in circulation we do not know. It is surprising, however, the number who give credence to these fool reports.

Nominations For The 1916 Village Council

The surprising lack of interest shown by the ratepayers of Oyen in the nominations for their village council is an inexcusable fact in its deplorable.

In failing to attend the meeting they not only showed a lack of public spiritedness, which is essential in any community, and which, particularly under the present circumstances is hard to understand, but they showed a lack of courtesy to the men who have held office during the present year, have proved themselves capable administrators, and have given general satisfaction.

If the ratepayers were not willing to come forward with nominations they could at least have been present to pass a "Resolution of confidence" in the present council, and give these men, a vote of thanks for the service they have given during their term of office.

Across the Andes

The following account of a trip from Valparaiso, Chili, to the West coast of South America, by Rares Agnes on the East coast of South America, was written by Mr. V. Winder, one of the party who made the trip.

As we neared the summit of the Andes a strong wind was blowing which was exceedingly cold, and everybody's teeth chattered; in fact, one could not keep them still. I never felt so cold weather before, nor do I ever wish to do so again. As we gained the summit we saw a white and misty good view of the ground we had travelled over. It was a scene beyond description: the first thing I noticed was the long trail of miles behind us, 150 of them creeping up the mountain side like a long serpent, and away and away stretched the mighty Andes until the eye reached the Pacific ocean, 60 miles away. I should think in fact I am sure, it is one of the most stupendous and awe-inspiring sights to be possible for any man to look upon, and one that I shall never forget as long as I live. Of the view, Darwin says, "The wind on the summit was exceedingly cold, but it was impossible not to stop for a few minutes to admire again and again the colour of the heavens, and the brilliant transparency of the atmosphere. The scenery was grand; in the westward there was a line of mountains, divided by profound ravines." Of course, Darwin saw many things during his voyage in the "Beagle," and does not go very elaborately into detail, or he would possibly have had a great deal more to say about this view, which is one of the finest to be had of the Andes. Just as we were leaving the summit we saw another mountain, about half a mile away it seemed to me, although I daresay it would be

PLANS FOR FARM BUILDINGS WITH BILLS OF MATERIAL AND INSTRUCTIONS HOW TO BUILD

- |                          |                                     |
|--------------------------|-------------------------------------|
| 1. General Purpose Plans | 6. Pigsties & Suckling pens         |
| 2. Dairy Barns           | 7. Poultry Houses                   |
| 3. Beef Cattle Barns     | 8. Improvement Stacks and Granaries |
| 4. Horse Barns           | 9. Windmill and Cylinders           |
| 5. Sheep Barns           | 10. Farmhouses                      |

No expense or trouble has been spared in making these booklets of real value to the farmer. The building plans, the up-to-date information concerning the handling of cattle, horses, sheep, pigs and poultry and other farm subjects contained in the booklets, have been prepared by the College of Agriculture of the University of Saskatchewan, and are approved by the Department of Agriculture. Information concerning the proper way to use and the means of figuring out of material for the buildings, are supplied by the Farm Service of British Columbia. The object of these booklets is to help farmers to use material, grown and manufactured in Canada. By showing the public farmer how to use our Western timber to the very best advantage, better buildings are made easier and cheaper. Good service and satisfaction for the farmer can only increase the demand for Canadian lumber. It is upon her lumbering industry that the prosperity of British Columbia partly depends. It is much to be regretted that for many years the West by buying lumber products.

Any of the above booklets which you are interested will be sent free upon application to the Chief Forester, Victoria, B.C. Lumber reference will also be supplied to lumber dealers on request.

more as distances are very deceptive in a clear atmosphere, another caravan of about 70 mules, but did not get to know who they were until we arrived at Las Cuevas. It turned out to be a party which was going to scale Aconagua, and comprised Mr. Fitzgerald, a wealthy Australian, who defrayed the cost of the expedition and who who makes mountain climbing his hobby, a Mr. de Trafford, one of the Manchester de Traffords, Zubriggen the most famous of Alpine guides, and several ponies and porters from Mendoza. I afterwards saw in the English newspapers that Zubriggen reached the summit, but the others, after many attempts extending over several months, were forced to give up.
This is only the second time that Aconagua has been conquered; the first time was by Sir Martin Conway, who also sailed Chinaman in Peru, which feat has never been equalled up to the present.
Aconagua is 23,910 feet.

Resuming our journey again, we soon reached an elevation of 16,500 ft. above the sea, which is a little less than that of Mont Blanc in the Alps, and immediately commenced our descent of the Via Crux on foot, dragging our mules behind, as this part of the journey has been steep to ride, and which I found was terribly dangerous. On account of the snow melting so rapidly it had overflowed its regular course, and run over this zig-zag road, which is cut in the mountain side, and has 120 odd turns from top to bottom, to stanches of as much as 60 yards so that in these parts both feet and hand holds had to be cut in the ice by the guides. When we came to these portions, the guide held the mule till each passenger had got across, and then sent it after us. To see the way they got across was marvellous. It was a wonder to me how all the passengers passed in safety, especially the five who were still sick, and had to be literally carried between two guides down this road.

Concluded in next week's issue.
